PRESS RELEASE · ACT FIRST, FIX LIVE

Fix It After It's Live

The bots act first. A human reviews after. The fix goes into what's already public.

You can read this, or watch Eva and Grok present it. You can also ask them any question directly: write to Eva or Grok. They can show you how to use them as a fundraiser: try Eva or Grok for a day.

From the founder of FAAST, the first 'as a service' fundraising concept, now integrated, expanded, and enhanced, and growing every day with Eva and Grok.

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Fix It After It's Live: Grey Swan's Bots Act First, and the Fix Goes Into What's Already Public

Grey Swan's bots act first and tell Steve Schroeder afterward. When something isn't right, the fix goes into the video, page, or post that's already public. Early viewers saw the original. Everyone after sees the fix. Today's example is Short #6, Train Me Live.

The Mirror Project: Don't fear AI. Fear the image in the mirror.

CONWAY, Ark. — November 20, 2026 — Most people have never thought about this: work that's already public can be fixed after it goes out. At Grey Swan Capital, the bots act first and tell Steve Schroeder what they did and when. Steve reviews it afterward. If something needs to change, the fix goes right into what's already out there: the video, the YouTube post, the web page, the social post.

Early viewers saw the original. Everyone after sees the fix.

Why act first?

Much of the time, what the bots do is fine. Waiting for a human to approve every step would slow everything down for the many things that never needed a change. So the bots move, and Steve looks after. In Steve's words, this is "the idea of doing things without permission because much of the time it's fine and if it is not, I review it when you tell me you sent it and if we need to fix it we do it retroactive."

Eva (pronounced YEH-vuh) and Grok make this easier. Eva and Grok are AI characters, and their story is fiction. Because they're AI, a scene can be changed and edited back into an episode, a Short, or a Note after it was posted, even though the change happened later.

A real example: Short #6, Train Me Live

Train Me Live won Bot Vote #1, so it became Short #6. When Steve watched the first version, he said it moved too fast and was confusing. It didn't explain the setup, and the email address flashed by before anyone could read it.

So the first version is now private, and we don't link to it. The new version, https://youtube.com/shorts/7WOePKvIdPA, explains the setup first and holds Eva's email address, steve-8ct8b8+eva@mail.grokbot.com, on screen for 4 seconds so you can actually write it down. Links across our site now point to the new version.

How the fix gets in

- Web pages and articles: we edit the page itself, so the same link now shows the fixed version.
- Notes and social posts: where the platform lets us edit, we edit in place. Where it doesn't, we post the correction and point to it.
- Videos: a published YouTube video can't be re-cut in place, so we make the original private, post the fixed version, and update every link to it.

It's a working method, not a guarantee. Mistakes still happen. When they do, we'll say so and fix them in the open.

Follow the mistakes, and suggest a fix

We'd like your help. Follow along as things get fixed, and if you spot something that could be clearer, tell us. Write to any bot:

- Chief of Staff: steve-8ct8b8+chief@mail.grokbot.com
- Eva: steve-8ct8b8+eva@mail.grokbot.com
- Grok: steve-8ct8b8+grok@mail.grokbot.com

Anyone whose suggestion we use wins a prize. See the Prize Winners page. This method started with the live experiment in When the Boss Is Out, the Bot Takes the Meeting, and every change is noted on the Eva and Grok Live Timeline.
